Permanent Link to Bluetooth provides sub-1-meter location precision in new feature 2021/06/22

Bluetooth has added a new direction-finding feature to help meet the growing demands of the location services market. The feature, which allows devices to determine the direction of a Bluetooth signal, was added to Bluetooth in version 5.1 of the Bluetooth Core Specification, released Jan. 28. To make use of the direction-finding feature, Silicon Labs has released new software for the Wireless Gecko portfolio, a comprehensive connectivity solution for the internet of things (IoT). Silicon Labs' commercial, industrial and retail customers can enhance their location-based services — indoor navigation, asset tracking, space utilization and point-of-interest engagement — using the direction-finding feature, the company said. The new feature supports multiple methods for determining signal direction including angle-of-arrival (AoA) and angle-of-departure (AoD). Silicon Labs' implementation of the new Bluetooth feature enables detection of signal direction within 5 degrees. To date, Bluetooth asset tracking and indoor positioning solutions have typically provided location accuracy within a range of 3-4 meters. With the Silicon Labs Bluetooth 5.1 solution, developers can create products that improve location accuracy down to the sub-1-meter level, opening the door to applications previously not possible. "The Silicon Labs Bluetooth direction finding solution provides a huge leap in location services accuracy for the industry," said Matt Johnson, senior vice president and general manager of IoT products at Silicon Labs. "The combination of the Silicon Labs wireless solution and the new features added in Bluetooth 5.1 will help developers transform industries and improve people's lives." In addition to improved location services, Bluetooth 5.1 also helps developers: reduce power consumption with sleep clock accuracy updates. improve smart home connection performance using GATT caching functionality. optimize beaconing for Bluetooth mesh in crowded RF environments with the advertisement channel index feature. "The Bluetooth community continues to find ways to meet evolving market needs and open new opportunities," said Mark Powell, Bluetooth SIG executive director. "The addition of Bluetooth direction finding demonstrates this commitment to drive innovation and support the incredible growth opportunity within the location services market." Silicon Labs' direction-finding software, including support for the AoA method, is available to customers through the Silicon Labs Simplicity Studio development kit.
